THE THREE ROSES.

Three roses grew beside the road,
Three roses very sweet;
One brushed her lips, one touched her hood,
And one lay at her feet.

And one was passionate Desire—
She left it where it grew;
And one was love, as well as fire—
She paused to note its hue.

And one was Trust—she stepped aside,
To feel beneath her tread;
She thought the tender flower had died,
But Trust is never dead.

Three roses grew on bush and brier,
When next she passed that way;
She gathered Love, and lost Desire,
And Trust was here for aye.

THE DEACON'S ELOPEMENT.

"Good gracious, Betsey, if I don't come Brother Skeels riding down the road in his buggy! And as sure as I live and breathe, he's all dressed up."

At this exclamation from Maria, Betsey banged her flat-iron down on the inverted saucer on her ironing table, with a force that nearly broke it, and with three strides reached the kitchen porch, and, putting up her big, heavy hand to shield her eyes from the glare of the hot sun, gazed down the dusty road, rumbling along which there came a rickety chaise, drawn by a placid old mare, whose gait said as plainly as words: "I have done with the vanities of the world."

In the crazy vehicle, sat Deacon Skeels, arrayed in his black bombazine sack-coat, white home-spun linen pants, and a tall white hat, ornamented with a pathetic crane head which almost concealed the crown. This was a dress of state, as it were, with the deacon, and was seldom donned except on Sundays, funeral occasions, and at the time of camp-meetings—the hat band having been purchased especially for the funeral of the deacon's wife, who had passed into the spiritual world three months previous to the opening of our story.

The deacon evidently had some scheme in his mind, and clutched at the old mare impatiently, jerking energetically at the reins, in the vain endeavor to urge her a pace more in accordance with his feelings. But the beast was not to be nagged out of her accustomed dignity, and merely switched her tail deliberately, and went along in her own way.

"My sakes alive, Betsey, he's a coming here!"

"Well! you needn't go spilling the butter-milk and things over the clean floor, Maria," said Betsey, severely.

Betsey had no nonsense about her, and promptly discouraged any affectation or sentiment on the part of the sprightly Maria.

"Like enough he's drove round to get some flowers to put on Mrs. Skeels' grave," added she, sarcastically. "You lie down there, Tiger, and keep quiet."

But Maria, who saw a possible husband in every single man she met, resented this explanation of the deacon's unexpected visit in holiday attire, and promptly dismissed any affectation or sentiment on the part of the sprightly Maria.

"Just as though a man ought to mourn everlasting for a poor, weak little thing like her; she weren't no companion for him, no way. Such a man as the deacon deserves a real lively partner."

The deacon, after a prolonged contention with the offended mare, had persuaded her to be tied, and was now walking up between Maria's beds of pink and larkspurs, straight toward the front door, instead of coming around to the kitchen, as folks usually did except on very ceremonious occasions, which proceeding on the part of the deacon caused Maria to exclaim:

"What does all you, Maria? Do set down that bucket of milk and go and open the front door for the deacon, can't you? What are you fluttering so about, just like the deacon was keeping company with you? You do beat all, Maria. Go along and open the door, and Betsey replaced the cold iron with a hot one from the stove, giving it a vindictive spat with her wet finger, and began savagely ironing her brother Anson's buff linen vest.

"For the land's sake, Betsey, you don't expect me to let in Brother Skeels looking like this, do you? You just go and open the door while I go and slip on my other dress."

And before Betsey could remonstrate, Maria had climbed up the creaky staircase, and there was no alternative but for her to receive the deacon.

"It does beat all how women do act when there's men folks around," mumbled Betsey, as she proceeded to pull up the Venetian blinds, and open the front door for the worthy deacon, who had been lingering some little time under cover of the honeysuckle vine which grew on a frame over the entrance, to draw on a pair of black cotton gloves.

"Good-day, Sister Elizabeth. A warm day."

"Yes! right warm, I should think, to be riding around the country with gloves and things all on," said Betsey with great fierceness.

"Jess so!" he replied, abstractedly.

"I reckon you come to see brother Anson," said Betsey, to his further discomfiture; "he is just out in the potato-patch, hoeing. I'll call him."

"Oh, never mind! don't disturb him. Sister Elizabeth," said the deacon, somewhat hastily; "I just dropped in as I was going past to see how you were all getting along. I can't stay long. Hem! it's quite warm."

Having stranded upon this rock once before, it seemed strange that the deacon should rashly have ventured a remark the second time upon the weather; but it was an act born of desperation, as a drowning man will grasp at a thorn bush or stinging nettle when he finds himself going down. As might have been expected, he found himself stung.

"You seem to feel the heat amazing, Mr. Skeels. 'Pears like you'd be more comfortable in your store, daytimes, than riding around the country," said Betsey, in a thorny way that tricked the very heart out of what little self-possession he had left; and he was about to withdraw, utterly discomfited, when the low door leading from the "entry-way" opened, and Maria appeared, dressed in a manner that would undoubtedly have elicited some satirical comment from her sister's sharp tongue, had not that worthy lady at the moment espied a family of vagabond pigs entering the front gate, which the deacon, in his excitement, had forgotten to fasten—and darted out after them, waving her sun-bonnet wildly, crying, "Shoo! his, there, shoo, there."

Maria seemed a little embarrassed, and the deacon, too, at first, not having recovered his equilibrium, was not quite at his ease, and occupied some little time with his hat.

"Like as not, I'm hindering you from your chores, Sister Maria," said the deacon, finally, having deposited his hat on a copy of "Fox's Martyns" which lay on the table.

"Oh, no! not in the least, Brother skeels; I'm right glad to see you," said Maria, in such a modest, coy, coquettish way, that the deacon felt constrained to come, and moved his chair a little nearer the settee upon which Maria was sitting.

The deacon felt that the course of his wooing had run rather roughly at the outset, but now he was evidently sailing into smooth waters, and his countenance assumed a benign expression, habitual to it when goods were selling well, and life seemed at its best.

"You have been quite regular to prayer-meeting of late, Sister Maria; and you seem soothed like to my soul to see you there so frequently."

No doubt it was, for the deacon, if he had any of Betsey's keen insight, must have noticed that Maria's keen interest in religious matters had become suddenly awakened soon after Sister Skeels had been laid in the silent tomb; and her regular attendance at prayer-meeting was attributed by a few malicious persons to other motives than those of a pious nature.

Whether the deacon also had divined Maria's motives, and attributed her religious enthusiasm to his eloquent prayers and exhortations "in meeting" cannot be known, but certainly the tender and sympathizing glances she had cast over to his side of the church had effected upon his susceptible bosom, and now that she sat on the settee so near him, in the cool and quiet seclusion of Squire Parrot's front room, with the honey-suckle odors stealing into the low door, he felt moved to tenderness.

"Sister Maria," said he, "this is a miserable world."

"Yes, Brother Skeels," said the maiden, sympathetically.

"I don't take no sort of pleasure in nothing since I lost my partner; life seems so lonesome-like," said the deacon. "Scripture says it ain't good for man to be alone."

"I don't reckon as how you'll never find no one to take her place," said Maria, smiling.

"Ah! Sister Maria, there is them as could make me happy once more, as it were, and make me forget my grief for her as lies in the burying-ground with the long grass waving over her," said the deacon in a burst of eloquence.

But at this juncture the swallows in the big chimney flew up with a loud whirr that caused Maria to start up with a little scream—albeit she had been accustomed to these summer swallows from childhood—and the good deacon could not refrain from clasping his arm about her firm waist and entreating her not to be alarmed.

"My sakes! Brother Skeels, what a turn them birds do give me! There! I feel quite relieved now; thank you, kindly," said the gentle Maria, leaning very near the deacon's bombazine bosom, her eyes half closed, and one little white hand spread out over her maiden head.

"Don't move till you're calm, Sister Maria."

Whereat Miss Parrot, instead of becoming calm, showed signs of increased agitation, as was perhaps natural under the circumstances. The large palm-leaf figures on the bosom of her gown heaved wildly and she burst into tears; then the summer coat sleeve tightened about the round waist, the maiden's head sank lower and lower, until finally the cheek rested upon the bombazine bosom, and the deacon's voice whispered:

"Maria, you are the being I would have for my second partner; will you become Mrs. Skeels, and make me happy?"

Without waiting for her lover to repeat the offer, Maria whispered gently, "Yes."

It was night. Squire Anson Parrot's oats had been cut and piled in little stacks about the field adjoining the old farm house. The chickens in the cherry tree beside the kitchen porch slept peacefully on their perch, and the pale light of the moon shone softly over the scene. The inmates of the little house seemed to be resting likewise under a peaceful spell, and all appeared to slumber. Not so, however. One wakeful being beneath that quiet roof was tossing restlessly on her high posted couch. This was no other than the gentle Maria. She listened impatiently to the old clock ticking out the seconds, and to Betsey's peaceful snoring until she was assured that the household was at rest for the night; then she stole softly from her bed, and by the faint light of the moon proceeded to array herself in a green delaine gown which had been her "Sunday dress" time out of mind. She was just doing her lock hair when Tiger gave a growl, then a loud bark on hearing what sounded to him very much like the wheels of a rickety chaise rattling some distance down the pike.

"We are discovered," said the agitated Maria to herself, in great alarm.

But no! Tiger stopped to listen for the near approach of the wheels, but either he had been mistaken in the noise or the chaise had stopped, for all was quiet. He gave several low, dissatisfied growls, as much as to say: "It may be all right, but I will wait and see."

Maria went on with her dressing. Finally the last touches were added to her midnight toilet; she had tied on her head a coquettish bonnet of a previous fashion, and all was in readiness save her front teeth. These were artificial, and, having been made by a bungling artist, were exceedingly uncomfortable and always laid aside by Maria in private. She was sure she had put them in the right-hand corner of the stand-drawer. But no! Clearly they were not there. Maria's heart sank. She stole softly to the mantel-shelf, and felt around among the brass candlesticks, and came near knocking over the plaster cast of "Little Samuel," but no teeth were there. Heavens! She remembered now. She had left them in the pocket of her palm-leaf figured gown, on the occasion of the deacon's recent call, and the dress was hanging in the "big press" in Betsey's room.

A chill of dismay crept over Maria. But the teeth must be had. To appear without them was not to be thought of. She sat down on the floor and removed her tan-colored low gaiters, then, with stealthy tread, sought the "press" in Betsey's room. It was a desperate act, but what will not a romantic maiden venture, when love stands ready to reward her? She gained the corner in which stood the press, opened the door cautiously and felt for the dress. It was hanging on the peg where she had left it; she rummaged round in the folds for the pocket; the dress slipped from its peg and came sliding down, the hooks and eyes on the waist scratched against the side of the wardrobe with a noise like that of rats working their way into Betsey's apartment.

Now a rat was the one thing on earth of which the stout-hearted Betsey had a fear. She started up in great alarm, exclaiming, "There's them rats again! Shoo!" Maria heard her breath, and trying to escape Betsey's sleepy, vacant stare leaned too far backward and sat down noiselessly on the floor of the press, mashing in the crown of the coquettish bonnet and knocking it forward on her head in a rakish way.

Fortunately Betsey was too much afraid of rats to venture out on the floor in search of them, so she merely reached out and picked up one of her carpet slippers, lying conveniently near, and threw it at the supposed intruder with a warning to them to "Shoo." The missile flew in an opposite direction from the object aimed at, or Maria's bonnet might have suffered yet more severely. As it was, Betsey, supposing from the intense silence which prevailed that she had frightened away the rats, lay down again and was soon peacefully sleeping.

In the meantime, Maria sat breathlessly till assured of Betsey's oblivion, when she pulled herself out of her uncomfortable position, and made off with such haste as was consistent with cramped limbs and utter silence, taking the palm-leaf dress with her to the seclusion of her own room. There by the rays of the moon she hastily searched the pocket and secured the teeth which were hidden in the depths. These she placed in her mouth and then replaced the tan-colored gaiters, and, opening the door into the "entry-way," glided out, and, passing through the kitchen to avoid the watchful Tiger, soon found herself standing under the blue canopy of heaven.

And here let us explain. On the occasion of his recent call, after the tender scene of wooing described above, Deacon Skeels had elicited from that romantic maiden a promise to meet him at the end of the "cow-pasture" on the present night, and go off "quiet like" and be united in the holy bonds in the little sitting room behind his shop. Whether he was prompted to this course by the dread of encountering Elizabeth, or of facing the wrath of some of the other sisters in the neighborhood, who had their eyes on him since his bereavement, does not appear. At all events, he wished the deed to be done quickly and quietly, and this midnight elopement so pleased Maria, so far exceeded her wildest hopes, her most romantic wishes, that she readily consented to the plan, and hence we find her to night, skipping along the cow path to meet her waiting lover, with all the blithesome agility, if not the grace, of a young girl.

She hurried across the pasture so rapidly that when she reached the trying place by the lane-fence, where the deacon, the chaise and the old mare were waiting, she was entirely out of breath, and had to lean for some minutes against the fence for support, while her lover embraced her through the rails. As Maria recovered somewhat, she mounted to the top of the fence with what little assistance the deacon could render her through the opening between the rails, and prepared to leap into his open arms. She did spring, or rather dropped, but the skirt of her gown caught on the end of a post, and there she hung suspended, her tan-colored gaiters, with attendant ankles and hose, dancing wildly in mid-air, in a vain effort for a resting place for their soles, while the recalcitrant bonnet fell on her shoulders and her too-fatal teeth, insecurely fastened, flew out with the violence of the jerk she received. The agonized deacon stood below, uncertain whether to fly or remain. Gallantry, however, overcame his modesty, and with the encouraging admonition to his love, "Hold fast there, Maria, and I'll unlatch yer clothes," he proceeded to release her.

Maria was likely to "hold fast." She remained a miserable fixture until the deacon hoisted himself to the top of the fence, and by dint of great effort succeeded in "unlatching" the dress, when Maria fell to the ground in a heap, nearly fainting in dead earnest. Only the sight of the moonbeam playing on the silver plate of her front teeth saved her from a deep swoon. She clutched wildly at them, and, before the deacon had descended from the fence, had them in their place again. That worthy person backed slowly and cautiously down, and when certain of standing firmly once more on level ground, looked around eagerly for the luckless bride, who still lay in the corner, an object of pity as well as of admiration to a bridegroom.

"I hope you ain't no ways hurt, Maria. Chirk up, and don't be cast down at such a time," said the deacon, lifting her and leaning her against the fence, while he wiped the perspiration from his purple face. Then, placing his arm about the slender form of the agitated Maria, by slow degrees he dragged her to where the chaise and the white mare were standing in the moonlight awaiting the love-lorn pair, and induced her to exert herself enough to mount the chariot, with assistant boosting from him.

Finally they were off, Maria leaning helplessly against his bosom, and declaring vaguely that she would "rather a'died," referring no doubt to her teeth having seen her stockings and underwear and false teeth. The moonlight was soft and mellow, the air sweet and balmy, the deacon tender and affectionate, and by the time the old mare had turned her head around the corner of the lane, on which stood the deacon's house, Maria had yielded to the softening influence about her, and looked quite hopeful and bride-like.

When the happy pair entered the little shop, Hymen seemed to smile on them, and the small sitting-room seen just beyond, ablaze with the beams of a lamp, looked like a glimpse of paradise to Maria. The hour had come for which she had prayed and longed for years. She was to be a bride. Henceforth she would be the envy of at least a dozen spinsters of the village and neighboring country. Her cup seemed full of happiness.

The reverend gentleman, whom the deacon had imported for the occasion from "Kaintuck," in a skiff the previous afternoon, was roused from a sound sleep into which he had fallen in a wooden rocking-chair by the open window, and the brief ceremony was performed which converted Miss Maria Parrot into Mrs. Deacon Skeels.

Let us pass over the scenes that followed, when the news of the elopement was spread through village of L—the next morning. Excitement ran high, and it was not until the funeral of the oldest inhabitant, several weeks after, somewhat diverted the public mind, that the startled citizens recovered from the "turn" it gave them.

Mrs. Skeels greatly enjoyed the sensation she had occasioned, and took frequent walks past the corner grocery, where she was regarded by the assembled boys and clerks somewhat in the light of a circus. When Betsey became aware of the true state of affairs, on the morning after the eventful night of the elopement, she broke the vials of her wrath and poured out the contents, so to speak, and then, dressing herself in her best clothes, stalked like an avenging demon into the village, and, appearing before the frightened Maria in the little sitting-room behind the shop—then and there forgave her, and took her and the deacon home to tea, when a metaphorical calf, in the form of a fatted chicken, was hunted down and served up, a savory peace-offering on "the big blue meat dish" in honor of the returning bride. Betsey said she "never could abide them as went round cherishing spite on things. After a thing was done, folks must make the best of it, and not go to hankerin' for vengeance which didn't belong to them."

As for Tiger he was so overjoyed to see Maria back in the old place, he forgot his weight of years, and tore round the yard in a manner that suggested hydrophobia, and caused the bride to shed tears. The old mare, too, which had brought the whole party from the village in the memorable chaise—Betsey sitting like a glowing figure-head between the bride and groom, and a small boy hanging on behind—being trodden to an extra supper of oats, became reconciled to the match. Thus the deacon's second venture was not so bad after all.

Who Will Follow?

[Literary World.]

Longfellow, Emerson, Whittier, Holmes, Lowell—what are we to do for authors when these are gone? Who is in the succession? On whom will their mantles fall? These questions are often asked in a despondent tone, as if American literature were to die with these men. For one answer to them, it is enough to ask whether American literature died with Irving, and Cooper, and Poe? And if this is not enough, other answers are by no means wanting.

One such other is that in literature achievement is seldom repeated, and, therefore, fame is seldom duplicated. There has been but one Homer, one Dante, one Chaucer, one Spenser, one Shakespeare, one Milton. Each individual genius makes his own mark in his own place, and passes away. No one copies it. He who attempts to copy it proves himself not a genius. It is not to be desired, that we should have new Longfellow, Emersons, Whittiers, Lowells, Holmeses. We do not want their sacred touch to become a common performance. Their followers must strike new paths for themselves.

There is another thought. Great fames may be rising around us which we are too near to measure. The older generation of American authors, of which Bryant was one, have been before us so long as to become invested with some shadowy grandeur of the historic personage. The present public has grown up, as it were, into their presence. It found them in possession of the field. They were already of the past, and the past is venerable. They were before the war, and the war has shoved the years that preceded it back into an honorable antiquity. Ours is a new era. It is not yet that the men who belong to the new era should seem to be of the same stature with the men of the old. They are too near us. We touch them daily. They are one of our bone and flesh of our flesh. But for the generation which shall come after, they may be looming up into the proportions which other figures wear to-day. They have not yet assumed the historical perspective those lines alone determine fame.

But there is another thought still. We shall never know, as a wise and thoughtful man said to us the other day, how much the civil war decimated our literary ranks. Ours is a thinned out generation. We are the one-armed men. Our best members are missing. Poets, essayists, historians, philosophers, in the embryo, highest promises of future performance were cut down in the days of 1861-65. We shall never know what American literature lost in the losses of those terrible years. Perhaps there must be an interregnum of mediocrity until the youth of to-day have attained their capacity of to-morrow.

Traveling Dairy Maids.

[Rural New Yorker.]

In Finland there are traveling dairy-maids and dairy-schools. The dairy-maids, or traveling teachers, were first appointed in 1808, officially, and as they were paid from the public treasury every inhabitant had a right to claim instruction from them. So much interest was awakened by the dairy-maids in butter and cheese making, that the government founded dairy-schools, and schools were also founded by owners of private dairies, with women to teach the practical part of the work. There are eight pupils allowed in each school, and after a course of two years they pass a final examination before the members of the agricultural society. During the two years the instruction consists of animal physiology, tending of animals in general, treatment of the common diseases of the cattle, the use of the thermometer, different methods of cooling milk, and all those other points on the formation of cream, the treatment of cream, making of butter, the manufacture of cheese from skimmed and unskimmed milk, and finally book-keeping by simple entry—in fact a thoroughly learned business, which in this country is taken up and carried on in a most unlearned and haphazard fashion.

Hadn't Faded.

A big, fat colored woman went to the Galveston Chief of Police and told him that her stepson had run away, and she wanted to know where he was. "It boggles me to know why he left. He had everything he needed to make him comfortable. I don't know how he could have faded."

"Has he any marks by which he may be recognized?"

"Yes, sir," she said, "he has a faded old man's face."

Florence Nightingale.

Florence Nightingale was born at Florence, Italy, in the month of May, 1820. Her father was William E. Shaw, a banker who inherited the estates of Peter Nightingale, and, as the will provided, changed his name to that of the person whose property fell to him. Florence was the younger daughter. She enjoyed all the advantages, which were numerous, of persons in affluent circumstances, and early in life attained remarkable proficiency in several branches of education. Very soon her philanthropic instincts led her to study, systematically, the best ways and means to ameliorate the condition of the race, physically and morally. In the early part of her life she took up her abode in 1851 in the institution of Protestant Sisters of Mercy, established at Kaiserswerth, on the Rhine. Soon her activity showed itself, and we find her aiding personally and pecuniarily the Government, Sanatorium, which was restored and given a thorough reorganization. This work had scarcely been accomplished when Miss Nightingale had her attention directed to the inefficiency and mismanagement of the British military hospitals in the Crimea. One of the plans suggested for their reform was the formation of a select band of lady superintendents and of nurses to direct and minister in the hospital wards. Miss Nightingale, at the request of the late Lord Herbert, then Secretary of War, undertook the organization and conduct of that body, and soon, where confusion had reigned, there was order, and, by affording care and consolation, she alleviated the sufferings of all, saved the lives of many, and received the benedictions of a nation. A testimonial fund of £50,000, subscribed by the public in recognition of her noble services, was, at her special request, devoted to the formation and maintenance of an institution for the training and employment of nurses. Miss Nightingale has greatly assisted the cause by her writings. Her name is a household word in Great Britain, and, indeed, all over the Christian world it is the synonym of earnest, successful work in behalf of the sick and suffering.

Twitting on Names.

A good story is told of the late Edmund Burke, of New Hampshire. When in Congress he had a controversy with a Mr. Arnold, of Tennessee, who spoke of New Hampshire as a State whose chief products were ice and granite, and smugly suggested that his Representative was less like his namesake, the English statesman, than like Burke, the "burker." In his response Mr. Burke said he was at a loss to know whether the Tennessee Representative was like Benedict Arnold or some other Arnold; and, referring to the products of that gentleman's district as consisting mainly of dogs and hoop poles, brought down the House with the suggestion that, while the hoop poles went westward and down the Mississippi river, the dogs traveled eastward toward the national capital. This was the last ever heard of poor Arnold.—Boston Commonwealth.

Amateur Brass Bands.

Forty-five or fifty years ago a humorous reporter in a little town way down East—Massachusetts—bawled the fact that an amateur brass band had been organized. He declared that his slumbers were disturbed by the incessant tootings of the organization, and he savagely announced that if the thing continued much longer he would start out with his fustian lock musket and make an example of two. He wrote merely in fun. In fact, he was a member of that very band, and spent half his income in keeping it going. But his contemporaries did not know this. They seized upon his item, and made it apply to the brass bands of their own towns. Since then it has annually made the rounds of the press of the United States. It is now a standard. The reporter who has not made fun of the brass band is not up to the standard. At least four-fifths of the reporters who denounce amateur bands as a bore do so simply because it is expected of them. We haven't handled our organization over the coals to any extent yet, but shall if they don't get to work and practice more regularly, even though we admit that it is wrong to do it. Fact is, an amateur band is not a nuisance. After three or four weeks it plays so well that half the citizens turn out to its rehearsals and unqualifiedly declare that it has made wonderful progress. The grand and boast of most towns is the brass band. Yet the local paper is expected to refer to it in sneering terms.—Lancie City Boom-crump.

The Summit of the Earth.

Adolphus Schlagintweit, the immortal traveler upon unpronounceable explorer of Central Asia, calls the highland of Pamir "die Welt-Zinne"—the roof of the world. On the road from Poonja to Tarkand four passes have to be crossed that are higher than 17,500 feet, and for a distance of 280 miles the halting ground is not below the height of Pike's Peak. On the eastern plateau of the Beloor-Dagh there is a shelter-house near a cliff, from whose summit the main chain of the Himalayas with all its great peaks and immeasurable ice fields is in full view from the highlands of Lassa to the sources of the Indus, while in the west the head waters of the Oxus and Jaxartes can be traced to the borders of Cabook, where the peaks of the Hindoo-Koosh lift their crests of everlasting snow. In spring the echo of the avalanches resembles the boom of continuing thunder, and in midwinter, when the storm-wind sweeps the table land, whirling pillars of snow send along the ridges, and often seem to dance together like specters in their fluttering wind-sheets. Our 'Land of the Sky' in the Southern Alleghenies must be a mere piazza compared with top-peak of the earth.—Popular Science Monthly.

A DISORDERED LIVER IS THE BANE

of the present generation. It is for the cure of this disease and its attendants, BILIOUSNESS, HEADACHE, DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, PILES, etc., that TUTT'S PILLS have gained a world-wide reputation. No Remedy has ever been discovered that acts so gently on the digestive organs, giving them vigor to assimilate food. As a natural result, the Nervous System is invigorated, the Muscles are developed, and the Body Robust.

Chills and Fever.

E. RIVAL, a Planter at Bayou Sara, La., says: "My plantation has been visited by Chills and Fever several years. I could not make half a crop on account of bilious diseases and chills. I was nearly discouraged, when I began the use of TUTT'S PILLS. The result was marvelous: my laborers soon became healthy and robust, and I have had no further trouble."

They relieve the congested Liver, cleanse the blood from poisonous humors, and cause the bowels to act naturally, without any violent cathartic action. They are a simple and safe remedy, and you will gain all the advantages of a doctor's treatment by using TUTT'S PILLS. They are sold by all Druggists, and by mail, sent by express on receipt of the enclosed bill.

—The work of repairing Main street between Milwaukee and Court streets, is progressing rapidly.

—Mr. Fred W. Coon, editor of the Oconomowoc Local, made the Gazette a pleasant call to-day.

—Mr. C. L. Valentine State fish commissioner left for Detroit this afternoon in the interest of the State fisheries.

—Miss Jessie Patten returned from Chicago last evening, where she had been visiting her sister, Mrs. Charles L. Dudley.

—The case against Hagerty charged with malicious injury to a fence was again postponed in the municipal court to-day.

—A nice time was enjoyed by a large crowd of young people at a dance given in Mrs. Clark's barn last night, about seven miles from the city.

—The fireworks for the Fourth of July celebration have already arrived here, and are as fine as could be procured. They were selected by Dr. Palmer, who is a connoisseur in such matters.

—The ball games yesterday resulted as follows: Chicago, 8, Providence 1; Detroit 11, Worcester 0; Troy 2, Cleveland 0; Boston 13, Buffalo 8; St. Louis 8, Louisville 5; Athletic 6, Allegheny 4.

—The Orpheus Club has decided to repeat their Evansville concert at Lippins hall next Monday evening. The singers and the programme are good enough to draw a large audience.

—Messrs. H. H. Holabird and W. B. Jerome, both traveling agents for the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad, favored the Gazette office with a pleasant call this morning. Come again, we will be glad to see you.

—Yankee Pat is laughing in duress to-day, claiming to be too sick to appear in court and answer to the charge of being drunk for which he was arrested by Marshal Hogan last evening. He looks like a relic of the dark ages.

—Some trouble appears to be brewing among the circus people here about the leasing of the bill boards. Two shows will appear here next month, and each claims to have contracted for the bill boards.

—Whitney and Tiltonson, the managers of military contests are sending circulars to military companies in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa and Illinois, informing them of a grand military contest to be held in Milwaukee on August 21 and 22. The prizes to be awarded aggregate $3,100.

—Mr. Daniel Strunk has sold his remaining half interest in his grain binder to the Minneapolis Harvesting company, who recently purchased the other half interest from the Harris Company of this city. Mr. Strunk will move to Minneapolis where he will take a position in the works of that company.

—The decorated sets of crockery seen in Green & Rice's new store No. 23 West Milwaukee street, are attracting a great deal of attention. But this is only one item in their immense stock of new goods, in the latest style and best quality. Any one would be pleased and entertained by an inspection of them.

—The public interest in the approaching celebration of Independence day, is manifesting itself on all sides. Everything points to a mammoth celebration, and the country for miles around will send in delegations of amusement seekers. The committee are doing all in their power, and are succeeding splendidly. The small boy is getting up his enthusiasm, which promises to develop into shouting some other s. b. with a toy pistol.

—The ladies who superintend the Flower Mission of Chicago, have invited all generous and sympathetic people in the surrounding towns to co-operate with them, in sending flowers to the poor who are crowded in the smoky tenements of the great city, never see the beautiful gifts of nature, or inhale their sweet fragrance. Those who desire to aid in the good work are requested to meet in All Souls church every Tuesday evening.

—Yesterday afternoon the country in and around Johnson was visited with a very heavy wind and rain storm, which for a time threatened to reach the proportions of a regular tornado. The wind was blowing a terrific gale, and laid a great many fences low, carrying the pickets and posts for some distance. Mr. Rooney, who passed by soon after the storm, reports that the water was running in the Middle road as swift and as deep as a mill stream. No injury was done to persons, but the property of a number of people was hurt.

—Young or middle aged men suffering from nervous debility, loss of memory, premature old age, as the result of bad habits, should send three stamps for Part VII of Dime Series pamphlets. Address: WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo N. Y.

The City's School Children.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

A Number of Nuisances Reported by the Health Officer Ordered Abated.

An adjourned meeting of the Board of Health was held last night at the earnest solicitation of Dr. Whiting, the Health officer, who had matters of importance to bring before the body.

There were present Mayor Croft, Aldermen Robinson and Fitzgibbon, and Dr. Whiting.

Dr. Whiting submitted a report to the Board, of nuisances existing within the city, which he had visited in company with the Marshal. He urged the necessity of adopting immediate measures looking to the better sanitary condition of the city, and suggested stringent regulations for the suppression of nuisances.

The greatest evil he declared to be the out houses, a large number of which were in a deplorably filthy condition; so much so, in fact, as to contaminate the wells, and scatter the germs of disease everywhere.

The sewage from privies entering the wells, naturally affected the water and imparted qualities extremely detrimental to health.

He referred, also, in strong terms to the existence of the unsightly out-houses on the river banks, characterizing them as excrecences upon public decency and a disgrace to the civilization and refinement of the community. It was surprising, he said, how these places have been allowed to remain in full view of every passer on the bridges, the noxious effluvia sickening the nostrils and shaming the sight. Another source of disease and a nuisance very little if any inferior to the privies, were the numerous pig stys located in different portions of the city.

The horrible stench emitted from these places was positively unbearable, and in some instances an insult to the decency and cleanliness of the neighborhood.

Several other nuisances of a kindred nature were enumerated, all of which demanded immediate attention, in the interest of hygiene. He then submitted the following nuisances:

Rear of Carley's livery stable.

Rear of Finley's grocery.

Rear of McDermott's place.

Rear of B. J. Daly's bakery—slight.

Rear of long yellow tenement on Franklin street, two privies in wretched condition.

Rear of Grand hotel.

Rear of Mrs. Palmer's hair store.

Myers' house back yard—several.

Rear of William's block. Mr. Hatch, agent.

Royal Wood's stable.

Rear of Union house and City hotel.

Ben George's pig sty.

Tom Murray's machine shops—open sewerage.

Michael Holloran's hog pen.

On motion it was ordered that the above nuisances be abated and that the city marshal be instructed to serve notice on the persons mentioned, to remove them within five days of the service of the notice.

There being no other business before the meeting, Dr. Whiting suggested to those present that he would be pleased to see them in an adjoining room, where something more palatable would be discussed. He had provided some ice cream, to which the guardians of the city's health did ample justice.

Delicate Females.

The exactions of society, added to the cares of maternity and the household, have tested beyond endurance the frail constitutions which have been granted the majority of women. To combat this tendency to premature decline, no remedy in the world possesses the nourishing and strengthening properties of MALT BITTERS. They enrich the blood, perfect digestion, stimulate the liver and kidneys, arrest ulcerative weaknesses, and purify and vitalize every function of the female system.

An Iowa Sufferer.

Mayor T. T. Croft received a letter from one of the sufferers from the late Iowa tornado, this morning, relating their extremities to which he and others have been reduced by the terrible visitation. Any assistance which the charitable may feel disposed to render will be thankfully received, and if contributions are left with Mayor Croft at Croft & Whiston's drug store, they will be forwarded to the parties in need. The letter is as follows:

To the Mayor, Council and people of Janesville:

We have had a fearful tornado here. I am a farmer two and a half miles west of Malcom and seven miles east of Grinnell, and was in the center of the storm. My buildings, provisions, bedding, clothing, wagons, team and machinery, were entirely ruined and scattered to the four winds. Myself and family, nine in all, were in the cellar, in endeavoring to reach which in the height of the tempest, the clothes were torn from our bodies and the shoes from my wife's feet.

We were all more or less burned, but none fatally. I have forty acres of land left, on which I owe $300, and is highly improved. All else is gone. Grinnell and Malcom are receiving money, clothing, bedding and provisions. I applied for aid, and was told that it was all needed in the town. Myself and one other man, who lost his head, are the only needy and destitute persons between the two towns, but we have received no aid.

My loss is not less than $2,000, every dollar of which was earned by hard honest labor for eighteen years. Can your city help us? I am a nephew of Franklin Blood, lately deceased, who lived just west of your city. If you can give me a dollar directly to me and not through the bank. The other unfortunate is named S. L. Rogers, postoffice address, Malcom, Iowa. Help us if you can and God will bless you.

J. E. Blood.

P. O. address, Malcom, Iowa.

The letter contained a number of references to prominent men in Malcom.

The Weather.

REPORTED BY PRENTICE & EVENSON, DRUGGISTS.

The thermometer at 7 a. m., to-day registered 70 degrees above zero and at 1 p. m., 75 degrees. For the corresponding period last year it stood at 73 and 89 degrees.

The indications for to-day were: Lake Region—Local rains, slightly warmer east to south winds, partly cloudy weather, and stationary or slowly falling barometer.

Attention Comrades! HEADQUARTERS W. H. SARGENT POST NO. 20, DEPARTMENT OF WISCONSIN, G. A. R., JANESVILLE, WIS., June 25, 1892.

This Post having accepted an invitation from the General Committee of Arrangements to join them in celebrating our National Independence Day in this city, there will be informal meetings of this Post at Post Hall on Wednesday and Friday evenings, June 28th and 30th at 7 o'clock, for business and drill, in connection therewith.

It is important that every member of the Post appear at one or both of these meetings. Those needing the limited uniforms adopted for present use can obtain the same of Quartermaster J. C. Metcalf, if applied for soon.

Comrades will communicate this circular to all. By order of

S. C. Cobb, Post Commander.

E. G. Harlow, Adjutant.

Center

—S. W. Fisher, and Jonathan Cory, both able to be around with a fair prospect of recovery from their long and serious illness.

A grand opportunity for every patriotic young man in Center to engage his company for the 4th of July, will be afforded by the Young American Agricultural Society next Friday evening at Center Grange Hall.

—A feast for all, "Bread on the Waters" and a No. 1 concert, accompanied by a strawberry festival, ice-cream, candy and California peanuts, under the auspices of the Young Americans Friday evening, your money's worth guaranteed.

—The committee appointed to furnish music at the concert at Grange Hall the 30th inst., take great pleasure in announcing that they have secured the Hyde Band which will be a rare treat in and of itself. Come and hear the great violinist and his sister.

The wind storm Friday evening whipped off most of the young cherries which promised so abundant a yield this year.

—Nearly every-body has availed himself of the opportunity to set tobacco, and fully one-half of the crop is safely started.

—The board of directors of the Young American Agricultural Society, request all who wish to offer special premiums for their fair this fall, to be kind enough to do so immediately and leave their orders at the Gazette office, so as to accompany the premium list, which will soon be ready for circulation. The fair will be held at Mr. Geo. Cleland's, and will eclipse everything in the State but the State fair, so the boys say.

—Owing to the rain Saturday but few were in attendance at the monthly meeting, and business of importance was deferred for one month.

—Elder Wells and wife start on a two months' visit to his old home in West Virginia. May he have a pleasant visit and safe return is the wish of his many friends.

—Mr. Ira Parnley's new house is nearly ready for the lightning rods.

Albion.

—Tobacco setting is progressing rapidly. The prospects at present is that there will not be any scarcity of plants.

—Mark A. Head is opening a new drug store in the building now partially occupied by the post office.

—C. B. Oviatt has opened a wagon, carriage and repair shop south of the upper rooms of Drake's blacksmith shop.

—Miss C. E. Green, Miss T. E. Babcock and Miss T. B. Collins went to Milton this morning to attend Prof. N. W. Williams concert and the college commencement exercises on Wednesday.

—The Northwestern Mutual Relief Association of Madison, are receiving quite a large number of additions to their membership from this vicinity.

—We saw the other day a couple of strawberries of the Sharpless variety raised by T. B. Collins of this place, one of which was four and one-half inches in circumference.

—N. M. Webster picked in one day this week fifty quarts of ripe strawberries, and several quarts were still remaining on the vines.

Emerald Grove.

—The classing exercises of the school took place on Friday last. The pupils all acquitted themselves well. A handsome copy of Shakespeare was presented to the teacher, Miss Cora Spear, by her pupils.

—On Friday evening July 7th a dime entertainment will be given in the Congregational church consisting of readings, recitations, choruses, and music. After which ice-cream and strawberries will be served. Proceeds for the benefit of the ladies Mite Society.

—C. B. Oviatt and grand generally. —Everett Ransom returned from a trip to Dakota, last week, also John Wetmore and W. F. Bond.

—It is with pleasure we announce that Dr. F. D. Seebor moved into this place last week from Waterloo, Wis., and is occupying, for the present, the house of Mr. Good Miss T. B. Collins went to Milton this morning to attend Prof. N. W. Williams concert and the college commencement exercises on Wednesday.

—The teams of ponies belonging to W. F. Goodrich indulged in a puny race yesterday. Mr. Goodrich was driving out of the yard at his farm and stopped to close the gate, the team then started along at full speed down the road stopping finally near the store and fortunately doing no damage.

—That elephant which Hastings brought out the other day was nothing more than a small animal. It holds five barrels and is a boss arrangement we should say—does everything but making its own oil.

—The store will be closed on July 4th. Hastings & Munger both having special business on that day so they tell us.

—Remember that the Methodist church gives the first ice cream and strawberry festival of the season on Friday of next week, Jan. 30th, afternoon and evening, at the residence of David Jones. Uncle David is making ample preparation for a good time. Come all and gladden his heart, and satisfy your craving for berries.

—C. H. Serl is building a new barn on his farm purchased a short time ago. The place was known as the E. B. Hollister farm, on the town line between Richmond and Darien.

—Miss Flora Saxe, of Whitewater, was a caller in this community last week.

—Dan Williams is building a new residence one-half mile north of this village.

—Nettie and Edith Putnam, of the Whitewater Normal school, returned home last week, at the closing of the term.

—This place has a new miller, filling the vacancy left by James Ashley, who has gone to Dakota.
